

Voice Tune Master is a tool designed for music enthusiasts of all levels, which they can use to train both their guitar skills and voice. It comes with a user-friendly interface that makes it accessible to anyone that knows how to write notes and practice by them. Voice Tune Master is basically a note editor that allows you to use multiple tracks on which you can place notes and rearrange them. You can add the notes by simply selecting them from a group and dragging them over the track position where you want them. Obviously, Voice Tune Master allows you to play the notes and also offers you a large number of presets that you can use. Since everyone has a different way of looking at the notes and making sense of them, the application allows you to switch between different background modes. You can have it plain, as a gradient or a grid. During playback, Voice Tune Master displays an indicator that shows you which notes are played. In case the whole grid-view mode doesn't do it for you, it's possible to switch to a scale one in which all the notes are represented as on a partiture. Just like in the previous view, you can also use this one to add and rearrange notes. A thing that is a bit of a bother is that if you switch from the grid to sheet view, all the notes are correctly placed but if you want to go back, the notes disappear. On the other hand, Voice Tune Master makes it possible to save the partiture on your computer either as an image, which you can use to recreate the note arrangement, or in SVG format that automatically loads them. In closing, Voice Tune Master is a nice little application to have around when you want to practice but it takes a while to get used to it.

We've been following a group of five young adults for a few months now, as they juggle life and work and love and relationships and families and friendships. The name of the blog has, until now, been, "the blog of the Interim Chair of the Committee on the Status of Women in Theology." Today, we meet our first husband, and our first child. To a degree, this feels like a really long time coming. We'd always intended to do this, but the right time seemed to elude us. Now, it's finally here. We've spoken a few times now about how we'd hoped our journey would have gone differently, but ultimately what we've discovered is that we got exactly what we wanted: we had a great experience, we grew up, we married, we had a baby, we grew old together, and we started a blog. We have a lot to say, and so there will be some good, some not-so-good, and a lot of mixed feelings. We're not trying to write a memoir. We don't want to give too much away, but we've got our backs against the wall, so to speak. We're all into yoga, so we're determined to do this with grace and humour and kindness. In the meantime, we'll be sharing our photos and our thoughts on the blogs, and we'll do our best to keep you updated, and to offer you some perspective and perspective. And, we've got some really great co-bloggers lined up already, so we hope you'll keep following along. Our families have already started to follow, too. This gives us a lot of hope. We'll have a lot to say, and we
