That's good news for the average American family. In addition to a jobs report released Friday morning showing solid job growth, the Labor Department also reported: * The nation's employers added another 292,000 jobs in November, boosting monthly payrolls by 228,000. * The unemployment rate fell to 7.3 percent in November, the lowest rate in more than 6 1/2 years. * The nation's workforce increased by an additional 9.8 million people, to 156.1 million. * The labor force, which is the total of all people who are working or looking for work, has risen by 9.8 million people over the last year. That's the largest increase since 1948. * The nation's civilian noninstitutional population rose by 9.1 million, to a total of 314.3 million. * Average hourly earnings increased by 6 cents in November, another drop that brings the year-to-date increase to a four-year high of 2.9 percent. "These numbers are another indication that the labor market is tightening, with the headline job growth of 228,000 last month the largest gain we have seen in a year," said Ryan Swan, senior economist at Wells Fargo. Nearly 6.1 million workers filed for new unemployment insurance benefits last week. That brings the total number of jobless claims over the last three months to 1.6 million, the highest number since October 2008. Still, the number of new unemployment insurance claims remains at the lowest level since early 2010. In addition to the jobs report, another bit of good news last week came from housing, as the National Association of Realtors reported that sales of previously owned homes climbed by 5.2 percent last month. That's the largest one-month increase in home sales in more than four years. "For the first time
